Spread over 14.2 million square feet and located in the royal area of Nad Al Sheba, the US$6.4 billion project is set to redefine the traditional idea of luxury living by marrying environmental sustainability with indulgence.

Although setting new standards of luxury living, Al Barari Phase Two has been specifically designed to uphold and reflect the fundamental components of Al Barari by offering a number of distinctive living zones such as The Living Wall which encompasses a walled garden walkway featuring rustic organic shops, individual mixed retail outlets and lifestyle apartments; The Cultural Island with its open air markets, galleries, exhibition halls, theatres and Art Guild acts as the cultural heart and soul of Al Barari; The Grand Mosque, a timeless Islamic architectural statement representing the intertwining of the complexities of modern day living with traditional harmonious balance and The Old Souk, a blend of retail outlets, fresh markets, small offices, restaurants and coffee shops.

“In Phase Two we have set about developing a community rooted in tranquillity and harmony which further demonstrates our commitment to value creation not just through bricks and mortar, but more importantly through intrinsic, tangible experiences,” said Mohammad Bin Zaal, COO of Al Barari.

Mohammad Bin Zaal further commented, “We also want to push the realms of luxury living, and our Billionaire Collection with infinity swimming pools, hanging gardens, courtyards, home theatres and private home spas will re-define the apartment concept and reinforce Al Barari's position as market leader in discerning and distinctive living.”

Phase Two further houses 55 secluded spa villas each with its own private treatment pavilion and swimming pool. United by a single common building that makes up the alternative medicine village and spa, Soul Al Barari weaves nature with exquisite design.

Cityscape will be the platform from which Phase Two of Al Barari is revealed and where appointments will be taken for when the official launch date is set.
